Mondale Nominated To Lead Democrats n Autumn Election

By David S. Broder Washington Post Service

SAN FRANCISCO - The Democratic Party has bestowed its presidential nomination on Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, sending he winner of the party's long and pitter primary struggle into an up-nill general election light against President Ronald Reagan.

Appearing before convention delegates late Wednesday night afer a dealening version of Tchai-cowsky's "1812" Overture, Mr. Mondale claimed his prize.

"I come to the hall with a full neart to thank you for your kindness and your help," he said.

Communists Leave French Government

Role Is Seen For Centrists

By John Vinocur

New York Tones Service PARIS - The French Communist Party left the Socialist-led goverrament of President François Mitterrand on Thursday, assailing its economic policies. The move raised the possibility of a new political relationship between the Socialists and some elements of France's centrist parties.

After all-night meetings of the Communist central committee, and a 4 A.M. conference between its leaders and Laurent Fabius, the newly appointed Socialist prime minister, the party turned down four ministerial posts offered it in Mr. Fabius's cabinet. The move ended more than three years of participation in the government of Mr. Mitterrand.

The Communists, while accusing the Socialists of pressing economic policies that eliminate jobs and crush whole industries, said they still considered themselves part of the leftist parliamentary majority and that they would offer selective support to the government in the National Assembly, Georges Marchais, leaving a party meeting Wednesday evening, strongly criticized the Socialists' austerny program. The first test of their attitude is expected in a confidence motion

Mr. Fabius later named a cabinet list made up of Socialists and two smaller leftist groups. Until the break Thursday, France had been, since 1981, the only major ally of the United States with Communists in its government.

From the cabinet of his predecessor. Pierre Mauroy, the prime minister retained External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson and Defense Minister Charles Hernu. Jacques Delors, who will become president of the Executive Commission of the European Community, was replaced as finance minister by Pierre Beregovoy, a close associate of Mr. Mitterrand.

[Reagan administration officials privately welcomed the departure of the Communists from the French cabinet, Reuters reported from Washington, but did not ex-pect any early shift in domestic or foreign policy. The retention of Mr. Cheysson will help maintain continuity in the Washington-Paris relationship, officials said.]

The cabinet was composed largely of men with personal loyalty to the president, but of varying political tonalities. In an apparent effort to appeal to leftist Socialists who have criticized Mr. Mitterrand's economic policies, Jean-Pierre

There's no way you can put gether the winning numbers by ncentrating on any one or two yons," James A. Johnson, the ondale campaign chairman, said an interview. "We will be run-

Richard Leone, a senior adviser to the campaign, said the "Ferraro nomination is more electric and dramatic and national in its impact than anyone anticipated."

Mr. Johnson said the campaign's soundings show that some of the early resistance to having a woman on the ticket was easing. Now, according to private Mondale polls. Ms. Ferraro's selection wins approval among Democrats and independents by a 6-to-1 margin. Some Mondale strategists concede they cannot fully anticipate the net effect of having Ms. Ferraro

on the ticket. But the Mondale high command is unanimous in asserting that the Reverend Jesse L. Jackson's evangelical speech Tuesday night, pledging to back the ticket and appealing to blacks to back the Demceratic Party, has given an electri-fying lift to their longstanding plans to register millions of new voters, and to swamp Mr. Reagan

Even Reagan strategists have conceded Mr. Mondale's strength in some Northeastern and Middle Western states.

But the Republicans argue that Mr. Reagan has a nearly impregnable base in the West, and they contend that the natural political conservativism of the South and the buoyancy of its economy make it possible for Mr. Reagan to sweep the region from Texas to Florida.

Mr. Johnson disagreed. "If you look at the Deep South, you have agriculture in desperate shape," he said. "You have unemployment still hovering around 10 percent, and a couple of cases higher, as a major issue in Mississippi, Louisiana, Alahama,

U.K. Panel Assails Grants to De Lorean

By R.W. Apple Jr.

New York Times Service LONDON - A multiparty parliamentary committee has accused successive Labor and Conservative governments of "one of the gravest cases of the misuse of public resources" for many years in making huge grants to John Z. De Lorean to build his "dream car."

Mr. De Lorean's sports car factory near Belfast in Northern Ireland, set up under a 1978 agree-ment that the British hoped would provide 2,500 jobs in the economically blighted province, closed in October 1982, the day Mr. De Lorean was arrested on charges of trying to set up a cocaine deal to save his collapsing business.

Most Dissidents to Gain In Amnesty, Envoys Say

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches WARSAW --- Poland's Communist authorities will include four prominent opposition intellectuals in an amnesty for political prisoners to be declared during the weekend, Western diplomats reported

The diplomats, quoting Polish sources who had seen a draft of the amnesty legislation, said it covered Jacek Kuron, Adam Michnik, Zbigniew Romaszewski and Henryk Wujec, members of the nowdisbanded dissident Workers' Committee for Self-Defense, known as KOR.

Lawyers for the KOR leaders said the authorities were apparently indicating that, while the four might be released, they would be imprisoned again if they resumed political activity.

Mr. Kuron, meanwhile, launched his own attack on the regime Thursday, demanding the nonviolent overthrow of the country's Communist system, which he charged with provoking a national crisis

"It is essential for Poles to topple the political system that will soon result in both a crisis of values and a fundamental crisis of the nation, Mr. Kuron's son, Maciej, reported his father as saying when he visited him in jail Thursday. According to his son, Mr. Kuron

Tax on Citizens Abroad Opposed by Democrats

WASHINGTON - The Democratic platform approved in San Francisco includes a provision pledging a Democratic administration to work toward elimination of U.S. taxation of Americans living abroad and for their possible inclusion under Medicare coverage. The adoption of this plank in party policy climaxed a yearlong lobbying effort by Democrats Abroad aimed at Walter F. Mondale, the party's new presidential nominee, and his political staff, said

Andy Sundberg, chairman of Democrats Abroad. The new provision says: "Americans abroad play a vital role in promoting the ideals, culture and economic well-being of the United States. They are entitled to equitable treatment by their government and greater participation in decisions which directly affect them."

It says the party will "consider ways to: protect their rights; eliminate citizenship inequities; make it easier for them to vote; have their interests actively represented in the federal government: provide them with fair coverage in federal social programs; honor the principles of residency in taxation; and ensure the adequate education of federal dependents abroad."

U.S. law now imposes federal income tax provisions on all American citizens, regardless of residency, although citizens abroad are permitted to exclude the first $75,000 of earnings and a credit is allowed for foreign taxes paid.

Americans living overseas have argued that this put them at an economic disadvantage compared to foreign citizens doing similar work. Some U.S. companies abroad have hired foreign nationals to replace Americans rather than subsidize the cost of higher taxes for American employees.

The Mondale strategy there is to try to repeat the pattern of the 1982 gubernatorial campaign when Mark White put together a coali-tion of middle-class whites and black and Hispanic voters on top of a huge voter registration drive to upset the Republican incumbent, William P. Clements.

Mondale Wins at Last

"I hope he does not coast easily to the nomination ... For if he is not challenged seriously in the primary, he will never have to rise above and reconcile the many contradictions of the Democratic Party." That is what Hamilton Jordan, Jimmy Carter's political strategist, wrote about Walter Mondale a year ago, and he sure has got his first wish. If there is one thing Walter Mondale has not been able to do in the last year, even in this last week, it was to coast. What remains to be discovered now is whether Mr. Jordan's other wish can be fulfilled - whether Walter Mondale, or anyone, can bring Democrats together.

The San Francisco convention has heard plenty of uncommonly interesting oratory. But the former vice president, stolid reputation notwithstanding, has risen to dramatic occa-sions before. Mr. Mondale, the man who supposedly did not have enough fire in his belly, who supposedly was not tough enough to win — stands, finally, at the crest of triumph.

After flattening seven rivals in Iowa in February, he struggled back from defeat in New Hampshire and failed, repeatedly, to seal his triumph in Illinois in March. Ohio in May and California in June. Then he cleverly substituted the aura of victory for the fact. He announced that he had won. He summoned vice presidential prospects. He brooked no doubt about his nomination. He was probably right, but obstacles remained at the convention. Could he keep the party platform from being defaced by the graffiti of overeager Hart and Jackson supporters? Could be finally bring them gracefully within the fold?

This week the Mondale forces sweated their way past all the obstacles. Even the final platform lights came down to hair-splitting — "quotas" versus "veriliable measurements" for affirmative action. With all its concessions to the Hart and Jackson forces, the platform turned out flat and windy, but also moderate and practical, just the thing for a moderate and practical candidate named Mondale.

Jesse Jackson checked out in high, if protracted, political style: as someone wisecracked, "Jesse's finest two hours." His apology for having possibly "caused anyone discomfort, created pain or revived someone's fears" extended particularly to Jews. And he raised one of the few interesting political ideas of the campaign when he challenged his native South to shed what he called its unnatural conservatism. As the nation's poorest region, he said, it "has the least to conserve" if only its poor blacks and whites were not distracted by flag-waving and false prophets.
Wednesday night it was Gary Hart's turn.

The Colorado senator had often sniped at Walter Mondale, implying, for instance, that his opponent was motivated by an "inordinate need for power." But addressing the convention Mr. Hart, too, was gracious, pledging energetic support for the ticket.

And Walter Mondale, decent, dogged, a private man but also a highly professional politician, moved to his moment of triumph, nomination by the disparate Democrats. He is what their nominee probably has to be: someone who has kept credible ties to cities, farmers, unions and minorities, without forfeiting respect from the party's intellectual class.

Not even that reach can suffice, however, against so popular a president as Ronald Reagan, unless it can resolve the contradictions to which Hamilton Jordan referred. Can Walter Mondale, with Geraldine Ferraro of workingclass Queens, also bring back the working class? Only if they do can the Democratic Party again become the majority party.

Toward Real Arms Control?

Any U.S.-Soviet agreement to hold talks on anti-satellite weapons is significant if it creates a climate favorable to overall arms control negotiations. However, negotiations must not be used as a tool to expand armament, as has been the case for other postwar arms control talks. The main immediate problem is to reduce weapons on land, such as SS-20s, Pershing-2s and cruise missiles. Controlling the arms buildup in space may be the main problem in the 21st century, but the best way to break the current stalemate would be to reach some compromise on medium-range missiles.

The Chinese obviously want American technology. But they are balking at efforts by the Reagan administration to get them to agree to safeguards for preventing the transfer of nuclear materials and technology to countries that have no nuclear weapons. The administration should stand firm in insisting that the

Up to the end, the Democrats did not make it easy for Walter Mondale. They seemed to have a special taste for roughing him up, for giving him a scare. In some way that cludes exact definition, he seemed always to be asking for it. You could never quite be sure whether he was getting a burn rap from the party he had served so faithfully over the years, or whether he had invited and carned that rap - taking its support for granted, striking a complacent pose when he still needed to show that he considered himself a contender, not a winner, and appearing at the same time a supplicant who forever was buying off the party's fragmented constituencies. Party members - especially, it sometimes seemed, those who were pledged to him — appeared to love taking verbal pokes at their leader. These charges and complaints, we think, were in one respect wholly undeserved. They tended to be made with the most passion by precisely those people who had created the Democratic Party as a loose confederation of self-preoccupied interests. The complainers, in other words, were very often merely complaining about a politician's response to a system and structure that they themselves had built and learned to work like a slot machine over the years. In fact, Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley's speech nominating Mr. Mondale was a kind of master list of the various constituencies, group by group, that the Democrats have been so assiduously wooing. The relationship of the candidate and the constituencies up until now has been one of simple give and take. The constituencies all wanted something — a pledge of support for some favor, a prominent mention, a voice in the inner councils, one of their own in a highvisibility job, that sort of thing. The candidate wanted their votes for the nomination. It was that kind of transaction. No one much liked the way it looked. But more than political aesthetics are at issue now.

A wholly different relationship needs to be created if Mr. Mondale is to have a chance. It is a relationship to which the Democrats are no longer especially accustomed: The candidate will need to learn how to attract people's confidence and loyalty without offering them the regional or ethnic or trade-group equiva-lent of the old city boss's Christmas turkey basket. Gary Hart spoke of developing such a campaign, but it didn't come off and he didn't win. Mr. Mondale will have to do much more in this respect than Mr. Hart attempted.

The former vice president begins with a gigantic problem. In the South he is considered too liberal, too left; among Northern and Western liberals he has been faulted for being too conservative, too much the candidate of the status quo, too establishment. In one region of America he is widely believed to be too soft on military and foreign policy issues, too dovish; in the other his critics very often fault him for precisely the opposite flaws: too hawk-ish, too militaristic and the rest. Trying to meet these conflicting pressures has not greatly im-proved Mr. Mondale's image, even though his success at doing so has won him his party's nomination. And the party itself cannot greatly help him here, because it, too, embodies and reflects these tensions and differences.

In his acceptance address, Mr. Mondale can transcend the interest group politics that have so determined the nature of his pre-nomination campaign. We shall see if he is at last working on a pitch that cuts across regional, ethnic and professional lines to tell Americans on different sides of all these internal borders why they should put their trust in him.

Mondale Can Assemble, but Can He Lead?

SAN FRANCISCO — It has been a convention of good feelings, far happier than what most of the Democrats expected before they got here. The hall has resounded with real emotion, the cheers and tears of political hope. But, underneath, a wary sense of reality remains. The professionals know that the daunting problems of the party have not gone away.

One solid reason for optimism is the sense that the party has expanded its human base. The choice of Geraldine Ferraro as candidate for vice president added an enormous potential constituency of women. Recognition of Jesse Jackson as a serious political force, the first black to speak from a convention rostrom as a genuine candi-date, may energize a new black constituency.

No one who saw the reaction to Ms. Ferraro and Mr. Jackson, who felt the currents in the convention hall, will underestimate the political possibilities of their roles. But there is another side to the demographic story.

President Reagan has lagged among women and the gender gap may widen. He has little support among blacks, and more of them may come out to vote. But among white men, and especially the young, Mr. Reagan is way ahead. Polls give him an overwhelming lead — 30 points By Anthony Lewis or more - among white men under 40. Can the Democrats hope to win a national election unless they change those figures?

A central problem here is the changed character of American society. It is a country now of suburbs, of mass affluence or the scent of it, and images absorbed from television. Ronald Reagan knows brilliantly how to appeal to the votes of that new America. Do the Democrats?

In that framework, consider the outstanding speech of the convention, Governor Mario Chomo's keynote address. The rhetoric was thrilima the delivery masterful. With a small gesture of his hand, Mr. Coomo brought the crowd to silence. Some old-timers said it was the greatest political speech they had heard. It was as electrifying as any I remember, and I have been going to political conventions for 30 years.

But when the post-mortem analysts looked at Governor Cuomo's speech, they were divided over its political usefulness. And in their division we can see the Democrats' dilemma.

Critics said the New York governor looked too much to a past America, really the Depression

There are hungry and homeless Americans. But, the critics said, most voters would not recognize this picture of such a divided society because statistics do not support it. Most people feel reasonably well off, and the Cuomo images had no meaning to a family watching him on television in a suburban ranch house. Moreover, in the critics' view, the speech offered no sense of possibility, no vision of an alternative future. The other way of looking at it is that Mr.

Cuomo was giving Democrats a feeling of what they stand for — of who they are. As Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan put it, "he created a memory." At a time when many Democrats have no sense of the party's historic function, he told them it was a party of inclusion, a party that brought the despised and rejected to a place at the table of human acceptance.

That theme of caring was at its most powerful, thought, when Mr. Cuomo turned it abroad. Today, he said, "we have no real commitment to our friends or to our ideals, not to human rights, not to Sakharov, not to Bishop Tutu and the others struggling for freedom in South Africa."

There is the difficulty facing the Democrats today. Their tradition of human concern is not needed any less. In a world of tyrannies it is needed more, and Reaganism will not help the victims — in the Soviet Union, South Africa or elsewhere. But the ordinary voter has his own concerns. He does not want to hear what sounds like a message warning that he cannot keep what he earns. He does not want to be told that he is selfish. He will respond only if he sees new,

The one way America moves, short of crisis, is in response to presidential leadership. And that is the other Democratic question, the one that never left people's minds at this convention even as they cheered. Can Walter Mondale lead?

A Democratic optimist, figuring the phases of the convention, can put together the electoral votes for victory this fall: Ethnics return to the Democrats; blacks turn out in the millions; women move; the party carries the Northeast, the Middle West and enough of the South. But it still depends on the candidate for president.

Meanwhile, the Convention Has Taught Its Lessons and vice president are likely to be known well before the opening nowadays, there is a question of whether political conventions still serve a purpose.

The Democratic Convention here is confirming that indeed they do. Unlike those in other countries, American political parties do not have cards and dues. Their structure is loose. The only way to tell how many people adhere is by asking, through the ballot box or opinion

It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that the convention is the party, the proof of its existence, its definiand tricky ploys are the gestures, reflexes of the nervous system.

The U.S.-China Deal Worries Europe

R OME — European nuclear circles are paying close attention to the nuclear agreement with China which President Reagan initialed in stalled in Washington.

West Germany, Britain, France and Italy are actively competing with the United States for nuclear sales worldwide and to China in particular - the more so as President Reagan. moving away from Jimmy Carter's confrontational approach on nonproliferation issues, has focused pri-marily on maintaining a strong U.S. position in world nuclear commerce.

The Chinese nuclear deal is becoming a major test of American intentions. Flexibility in the U.S. stance on the highly sensitive issues of verification and safeguards would be inter-preted as a revealing symptom. Europeans have noted that even countries with a recognized degree of risk have received, in the past four years, the benefit of relaxed U.S. export policies. Argentina and South Africa are two among several examples. But China is not an ally; it is an increasingly important world power pursuing a policy of its own that frequently clashes with that of the Western nations in the Third World. This is the core of the problem. The China has been a nuclear military power for more than 20 years. But Beijing's policy in the Third World is another matter. The consequences of the agreement initialed in April would be calamitous if it allowed a number of nations approaching the so-called nuclear military threshold to look to China as a nuclear supplier. The only way to prevent this would be a formal Chinese commitment to refuse anclear trade with countries pursuing or suspected of pursuing acquisition of nuclear weapons. Reputedly, the Reagan administration is seeking such a commitment from the Chinese government; a powerful bipartisan view still prevails within Congress that nonproliferation concerns should take priority over commercial interests. But Beijing has indicated that it will not accommodate Washington's worries and might turn

This is becoming a typical case in which Western solidarity is needed. If the European governments, which practically control their national nu-clear industries, grant the Chinese easier terms — that is, if they sell nuclear materials and technology West can hardly try now to restrict without imposing the same verification conditions that Washington is weapons for its own national needs; without imposing the same verification conditions that Washington is seeking to obtain from Beijing —

With the Soviets now indicating strong interest in arms negotiations, there is special importance in determining how far they are willing to go on "cooperative verification" — the term for letting the other side in for a close look. The issue becomes important because of technological datas. Concern about potential Chinese they may well succeed in making a deal. But the consequences would transcend the commercial field. nuclear sales to the Third World is tant because of technological devel-

Among these are small, mobile land-based missiles policies and those of the United States and many of its European aland radar-evading cruise missiles. Neither of these weapons yet fig-ures very large in the superpowers' arsenals, which makes it all the more

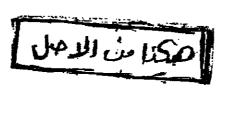

Verification has become a fundamental requirement in the U.S. govemment's policy for international deals in the nuclear as well as in the broader politico-military field. Inadequate verification, for example, was considered the main reason for the nonratification of Salt-2; and the United States is prepared to sign a chemical weapons ban only if it contains strict verification rules. The European allies would have good reason to be surprised if a more relaxed U.S. policy on verification finally pre-vailed in the nuclear deal with China.

New York Times Service

JERUSALEM - Although all of Israel's major pollsters are now predicting that the Labor Party will win the largest number of seats in the elections Monday, Labor's ability to put together a coalition government remains in doubt. With five days to go before Israel's 2.65 million eligible voters go to the polls to cast their ballots for the 11th parliament, the latest polls show Labor, led by Shimon Peres, with a solid, but in most cases shrinking, lead over the Likud bloc led by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

The most recent Smith poll, published by the Jerusalem Post on Friday, shows Labor winning 39.5 percent of the vote, down from 44 percent a month earlier, and Likud winning 29.5 percent, an increase of 1.5 percentage points over last month. A poll published by the newspaper Ye-dioth Ahronot the same day estimated Labor winning 51 scats to Likud's 41, after earlier showing Labor ahead 53 seats to 48.

No Israeli political party has ever won enough seats in the parliament, or Knesset — 61 out of 120 — to form a government on its own, without smaller parties. As a result, political analysts in Israel believe it is quite possible that Labor could win more seats than the Likud bloc, but Likud could have more small parties ready to join it in a coalition. Because of its stronger support among the small parties, Likud may need just 42 seats to be in a position to put together a government while

It was for this reason, the Israeli sources believe, that President Konstantin U. Chernenko agreed to meet with him. As one of Syria's three vice presidents, Rifaat al-Assad, 46, is well below the Soviet leader in status.

One of the main reasons Rifaat al-Assad is believed to be opposed by other members of the Syrian leadership is the fact that he has no international experience or any standing with Syria's main patron, the Soviet Union. His rivals are believed to fear that if the relatively inexperienced, and often brutal, Rifaat al-Assad were to take over, the stature and credibility of the whole leadership would be threatened and undermined.

The price of gold has tarnished, aborting the fantasies of gold bugs and their gurus, among them the Aden sisters, the lissome lassies who persistently purr in their investment service that gold will gyrate over $ 3400 an ounce; a prediction our researechers have ridiculed. The Adens are sisters under the skin to promoters of gold seminars; "currency experts" who make great gobs of paper money, debunking "paper". The universal distribution of bullion and gold shares from High Priests of Finance to naive believers in the Pews has been articulated by C.G.R.; a distribution, a madness, that will join the ranks of the infamous South Sea Bubble as evidence of man's culpability and greed. The Marriage of Food and Beer

by Bryan Miller

EW YORK - For generations of Americans beer has been a quaffing heverage, simple and straight-forward, brewed for those who ould put away a six-pack after a softball ;ame or at a backyard picnic. So the notion f pairing specific beers with certain foods -vas rarely a serious issue.

Today beer is taking on new sophisticaion with the flood of imported brands on he U. S. market - more than 200 - and the ise of small breweries from coast to coast. There are light-bodied pilsners, dark Gernan bocks, English and Canadian ales, searty Irish stouts and porters, steam beer ind more. With such a varied selection of tyles and flavors, it may be time to consider seer, like wine, as a complement to food. "I feel very strongly that beer should be hought of in this light," said Michael Jackon, editor of "The World Guide to Beer" Exeter Books) and "The Pocket Guide to

Beer" (Perigee Books). Beer connoisseurs use a lexicon similar to hat of wine lovers, describing brews as havng bouquet, astringency, bitterness, body, eastiness and aftertaste. It makes perfect ense, they contend, to think about how hese characteristics marry with particular

"When you eat food that is full-flavored, uch as red meat, you need a beer with lots of lavor," said Matthew Reich, owner of the ledgling Old New York Beer Co., which produces New Amsterdam Amber. Reich, vho taught courses in beer appreciation beore getting into the business, said beer with good balance of body, which comes from nalt, and bitterness, which comes from iops, can enhance a tasty meat dish far etter than "bland quaffing beers," Of course, Reich's New Amsterdam, an mber beer with a red tint, flowery aroma nd faintly sweet flavor, falls into that cateory, but he is quick to add that many others o as well. Those could include products of ther small breweries, called "microbrewer-s," such as William S. Newman in Albany, unchor Steam in San Francisco and Sierra levada in Chico, California, as well as some of the more flavorful Mexican imports such as Carta Blanca and Dos Equis, both of which are slightly flowery with a touch of caramel in the aroma.

"To tell you the truth," Reich said, "if I were eating a really spicy meal, say an Indian with Budweiser or Miller because they are so thirst-quenching.

Beer, like wine, can be characterized by isolating its several key components: body, which can be felt on the palate as well as in the stomach - the "filling" sensation; astringency or bitterness, similar to tannins in wine, and intensity of flavor. Once you recognize those qualities in beers it is easier to match them with foods.

"With rich foods, such as those with sauces that tend to coat your tongue, you need a beer with lots of astringency to cleanse the palate," said Joseph Owades, director of the Center for Brewing Studies, an independent organization in San Francisco. and an international consultant on brewing techniques. He suggests almost any all-mait beer, such as German pilsners or English ales or beers. Some widely available here include Dinkelacker, DAB and Spaten from West Germany and Whitbread, Watney, Courage and Bass from Britain.

Jackson concurs, giving an edge to the ales. "English ales are the cabernet sauvignons of the beer world," he said in a telephone interview from his London home. They are full in flavor without being too heavy, and at the same time they are fruity."

At the American Festival Cafe in Rockefeller Center in New York, part of a new three-restaurant complex, 13 American beers are offered. Andrew Young, director of restaurant development for the complex. says waiters are trained to explain characteristics of beers to customers.

"If someone asks for a hamburger and a Heineken we might ask if the customer would like to try something a little different to drink, such as a Ballantine India Pale Ale or a Fred Koch Jubilee Porter," Young said. With a light dish such as a pasta salad we might suggest a Rolling Rock, Cold Spring Export or a Lone Star, which are lighter." These regional beers, from Pennsylvania,

Minnesota and Texas, are light American-

Young said customers had been enthusiastic about experimenting, "We have been open only four weeks and we've sold 10 cases of Prior Double Dark, which is a lot for an made by C. Schmidt & Sons of Philadelphia, is a full-bodied copper-colored beer with what some describe as a "malty" flavor and smooth aftertaste.

Seafood and shellfish prepared without heavy sauces, particularly boiled lobster, go well with lighter beers — most American brands or the lighter Canadian ales such as Moosehead and Molson. The exception might be oysters, which many beer lovers say go beautifully with dry English or Irish stout.

"I never could explain it very well." Jackson said, "but there is something about a dry stout that brings out the best in oysters. It has that sort of dry, tangy sensation that you might expect would drown out oysters, but it doesn't." Howard Hillman, author of "The Gourmet Guide to Beer," calls Guinness Stout and oysters "a marriage that was made in heaven.

The consumption of Japanese and Chinese beers with Oriental food may have more to do with the "hot does taste better at the ball park" syndrome than any natural affinity, some beer experts comment. Oriental beers are, by and large, brewed in a German style established under the tutelage of German brewmasters. Kirin is a malty, filling beer; Sapporo is slightly more bitter, and Suntory is one of the lightest. Most Oriental beers are made with a combination of malt

"It may seem strange, but somehow I enjoy a beer blended with rice with Chinese food," said Taylor Lumia, who helped de-velop the beer list at the Joe Allen Restaurant in New York - 15 bottled beers and

There is a lack of consensus about beer and spicy Oriental food. Some say a quaffing beer is what is required, while others, such as Jackson, favor a dark German beer in the Munich style such as Spaten.

Bernstein, Beyond 'Tahiti'

by Lon Tuck

AIRFIELD, Connecticut - Leonard Bernstein has kept his own counsel about his new opera, "A Quiet Place," and during its perfor-in Houston last year, he seemed troubled. But now he says, "At last I am confident about it.

Drastically revised, the opera will have its first U.S. performance in its new form at the Kennedy Center in Washington on Sunday. As a visitor enters Bernstein's studio, he is on the phone with the conductor John Mauceri, quizzing him about water damage done to the orchestral parts of "A Quiet Place."

"Something seeped into it, it was air-mailed [from Milan], but the trunk was not made of metal, which is a lesson to learn," says the 65-year-old musician whose celebrity began so early in life that only now does middle age seem to have settled in. You see it in the ever whiter, but still thick hair, and in the weightier figure. He had to turn 60 before lots of people stopped thinking of him as a

As for the water damage, things were not so dire as feared; the skills of the Library of Congress in drying out the paper were remarkable. And it turned out that some of the final revisions, in red and blue magic markers, were the main losses (most still reasonably fresh in Bernstein's and Mauceri's minds). How good is Bernstein's memory? "Well," he replies cautiously, "it is unpredictable."

Still, it was a scare. "A Quiet Place" uses a very large orchestra — so much so that, explains Bernstein, "the first-violin parts run to over 100 pages."

I T IS late afternoon, and he points to the upright desk where he works in the studio (a former carriage house) at his meticulously tended country place. The desk is wide so that he can work on more than one thing at a time. The only music there is a piano score of West Side Story." He's conducting it in a new recording this fall with Kiri Te Kanawa ("It's the perfect voice for Maria, at last").

"That's where I wrote Wonderful " Bernstein says, and other works, too. It is, after all, Bernstein who gave us the élan of "Candide," the wit of "Wonderful Town," the breadth of "Serenade," the gutsiness of "On the Waterfront," the sensibility of "Songfest," the commitment of "Mass," and the rapture of "West Side Story." He is a man of many talents (too many, a hostile Harper's magazine article argued last year), including a fondness for word puzzles. "I get all the British ones, like The Listener, The Guardian, The Observer, and so on," he

The diversity of Bernstein's life is reflected in the contents of this cozy, dark place. There are the photographs of his principal mentor, the longtime Boston Symphony music director Serge Koussevitzky. Another is of Dimitri Mitropoulos, who preceded him at the New York Philharmonic. ("It was he who first told me that I was a conductor.") There are some surprises, such as two photos generously inscribed by Arturo Toscanini, whom Bernstein knew "only in the last years." On the coffee table is a cigarette case inscribed "25th Reunion: Harvard University."

But the subject immediately on his mind is "A Quiet Place." It was little more than a year ago that it opened with the Houston Grand Opera to what might mildly be called mixed reviews. Bernstein himself had misgivings about what he had wrought, leading to delays in the openings at the other co-sponsoring companies, La Scala and the Kennedy Center. The result was major surgery, even by comparison with such extensive operatic rewrites as Puccini's "Madama Butterfly."

At one point he chortles, "You know, I do work for my living."

The original idea was to do "A Quiet Place" as a 30-years-later update on the portrait of a distraught suburban family that Bernstein portrayed in his work "Trouble in Tahiti" (those were the days when there was something innovative in writing about sub-

In Houston, "Trouble in Tahiti" came first, followed by "A Quiet Place." It was thought by many that the dramatic action of "A Quiet Place," combined with its occasional atonality and the Mahlerian intensity of its symphonic interludes, did not grow credibly out of what Bernstein has called the satirical "lightness" of "Tahiti."

But since then there has been, among other things, his triumphant American tour with the group he conducts most often, the Vienna Philharmonic ("what an incredible orchestra!"), and the success of "A Quiet Place" at La Scala. At the Kennedy Center, as at La Scala. 'Trouble in Tahiti" will be seen as a divided work, its separate parts becoming flashbacks in "A Quiet Place." As before, the central musical - and philosophical - moment grows out of a poignant passage in "Tahiti": Dinah and Sam, husband and wife, antici-pare the emptiness of the life they seem destined to live together, in a lovely duet: "And where is our garden with a quiet place? Why can't we try to find the way

Their dream is not to be. "A Quiet Place" opens with Dinah's wake after a suicidal auto accident. Among many others, their estranged children. Dede and Junior (and François, Dede's husband and Junior's homosexual companion), gather for the occasion. Not a happy story, but in the new version the message seems more hopeful.

"It is now more Sam's story," and the story of the reconciliation of a family, says Bernstein. "That is really what the opera is his mind, though, about what he wants to say: "It is about what has happened to the American dream.

Bernstein takes no credit for this solution to the dramatic dilemma he was addressing - the disaster that faces a family in which the members cannot communicate until a death brings them back together. The new version "was all John Mauceri's idea and nobody else's," Bernstein says about the conductor who will also direct "A Ouiet Place" in Washington.

'Frankly," says Bernstein, "I wouldn't have guessed that it would work. But it was put to the test in Milan, with a non-Englishspeaking audience, and after all, one of the things it is about is the way we speak in our times. This is not the usual opera. There are no sword fights in this kind of opera. There's no action except the psychic action. But it worked with the audience and the critics." He is even in a good humor about some, though not all, of the darts thrown his way concerning "A Quiet Place." Of the main theme of the final duet between Sam and Dinah, he observes, with a slight tone of disparagement, "That's the one they call the 'Meistersinger' melody." The first four notes are similar to some famous ones from Wagner's opera, but, says Bernstein, "It never occurred to me until somebody said so. Somebody else heard something from Tosca in there, but I couldn't buy that, And, you know people are always hearing Stravinsky in my music, though no one ever used material from other composers more than Stravinsky himself."

BERNSTEIN first came to New York from his native Boston, after his graduation from Harvard, to conduct. And that was several years before his legendary debut with the New York Philharmonic in place of the ailing Bruno Walter.

"It was Dimitri [Mitropoulos] who first told me that I had to come to New York." he says. "I remember the time. Hitler had just invaded Poland, and I thought it was the end of the world. Then I auditioned for Fritz Reiner in Philadelphia. And I started being a

"The only difference, though, was that I was also a composer. But they don't entirely conflict, because as a conductor I can identifv with a composer - when I am lucky I am a composer. It entitles me to show the cre-

In that sense Bernstein is similar to Gustay Mahler, but he does not mention that as conductor of the New York Philharmonic it was he more than anyone who brought about the contemporary popularity of Mahler's works. In his studio, there is a whole wall devoted to Mahler, who himself was once the conductor of the Philharmonic - programs.

photographs and whatnot. Bernstein discusses the increasingly rare Mahlerian combination of the composerconductor. What, he is asked, has he had to sacrifice to be both? "That's one reason why I don't conduct much opera any more. It is my loss not to conduct it." And he adds, a little puzzlingly, "I never really had a career.

Conducting is really just a thing." At another point Bernstein is talking about how nonvocal music often mimies the patterns of singing, but can sustain longer lines, ("Instrumentalists have it easier. That's what symphonic music is all about. It goes on longer than the breath. Just imagine singing the allegretto of the Beethoven Seventh Symphony. It couldn't be done.") To emphasize his point, he leaps to his piano to play Chopin's D-flat Nocturne. It must be years since Bernstein has given a piano recital, and he says it has been "more than a year since I have played a concerto."

OBVIOUSLY, Bernstein is relieved that the task of writing "A Quiet Place" is substantially behind him, and he seems considerably more serene than he was in Houston a year ago. He talks optimistically, excited about the future. He dismisses the notion that conductors get so much exercise that they live to the ripest old ages. "It's just not true," he says. "And the ones that do are mostly the ones whose wives run their lives and their life styles." (Bernstein's own wife, Felicia Montealegre, died in 1978 of cancer at age 56.) And raising his scotch and water, he says with a chuckle, "I drink, I smoke and I screw

"But I think I have got several more operas in me." Bernstein says. He's going to be taking some time off from conducting for a few months. "I have an exciting idea for a opera. It's a big one.

His long planned project of making an opera of Vladimir Nabokov's "Lolita" has been ditched, though,

"It's a great story, but the trouble with it as music is that the title character doesn't have anything to say. After all, she's just

Conflicts and Issues of a Soviet Establishment Playwright

by Serge Schmemann

OSCOW - In the 35 years since his first play, "Her Friends," was staged in Moscow, Viktor S. Rozov says he has been regularly asked why he focuses so often on the conflict between children and parents.

"At first I used to answer that youth is the future, that the young ave a feel for life, etc., etc. This was untrue, or only partially true, sid the playwright, one of whose most popular plays, "The Nest of the Wood Grouse" is having a limited run at the Public Theater in te New York Shakespeare Festival. "Then," Rozov continued, "I began saying that theater is based on enflict, that a youth of 15 or 16 is an organism filled with sap, but tat he had a primitive understanding of life, and so the conflict of outhful emotion and a complex world was an inherently dramatic tuation. But this too was not true. The truth is this: I don't select my ibjects. They select me." If so, the choice seems to have been propitious. In a country where reater labors under a system of strict censorship, Rozov's dramas.

ften exploring moral issues through conflicts within a Soviet family, ave become fixtures of Soviet theater repertories, regularly packing he houses they play in. At the age of 70, Rozov is something of an elder statesman in the trange attribute of the bird: "When it emits its love song, it becomes blivious to sight and sound. It can be taken with bare hands.

"The father in the play [played in New York by Eli Wallach] is like that. He is so wrapped up in his job and career that he cannot see what is happening in his own house, in his own nest." The conflicts on which the drama is built, likewise, need no explaining for Soviet audiences. The strains between a father caught up in a typically Soviet apparatchik's career - bartering favors, buttering up foreigners, callously assessing the impact on his career of the suicide of a colleague's son - and his introspective daughter and independent-minded son are couched in thoroughly Soviet experiences and images.

The climax of the play is a case in point. The quiet daughter Iskra (played in New York by Mary Beth Hurt) tries to seek solace for her despair before the icons her father collects as works of art.

"She looks at the icons and suddenly falls to her knees." reads the stage direction. "She tries to cross herself, but does not know how to. She crosses her arms on her chest." Her father and her ambitious husband (played by Dennis Boutsikaris) catch her in this position. and in fury the father demands that she spit at the icons.

The confrontation is snapped by the mother (played by Anne Jackson), a thoroughly domesticated housewife who suddenly transforms into the front-line nurse she once was and lashes into the husband with a violence that drives him into retreat. "It's a terrible terrible scene." Rozov said. "Iskra's nature is earnest, withdrawn. She cannot share her grief even with her mother.

But when her soul becomes overfilled, particularly with grief, she must turn to someone. So she appeals to God." "I don't know if she's a believer. During the war, I heard grown people, nonbelievers, scream two words: Mama! Lord! In these critical moments they were searching for something, somewhere. On the Soviet stage, the shock effect of a young woman appealing to God in the home of a high official is strong, and rare is the Russian who would fail to sympathize with her or to share her father's panic.

in marshaling the images of Soviet life. There's the thoroughly Russian mother, meek and submissive until her offspring is threatened, and then erupting into a formidable moral force. The daughter too, is easily identifiable. She shares a name, Iskra, with Lenin's underground newspaper, and is an investigative reporter - one of whom every Soviet newspaper has in order to check on the grievances of readers. She is the closest Soviet equivalent to a champion of the downtrodden,

This is Rozov's world, a Soviet home where moral conflicts pit the young against the old, where social ideals clash with bureaucratic cynicism. It may not be grist for scandal, official repression, confrontation with the censors or any of the other elements so often associated with good writing in the Soviet Union. But then Rozov's popularity among viewers of all hues, and the respect he commands even among more daring writers, may be evidence that a Soviet work of art does not invariably need controversy to catch on.

The notion is one Rozov likes to spoof. He recounts the story of a French playwright who sent the draft of a new drama to a lady with a note attached apologizing that it was not even banned.

Still, taking pot shots at pompous bureaucrats can generate some displeasure in a society largely run by such people. Rozov's latest play, "Small Boar," was being readied for the stage two years ago when it was abruptly blocked by the Union of Writers. The subject, a youth whose high-placed papa suffers a political reversal, seems to have struck too close to home for popular consumption. Rozov, however, sidesteps political talk of this sort, and he expressed confidence that "Small Boar" would make it to the stage by year's

He denied the notion that the Soviet context compelled him to be circumspect in his imagery or plot. "In drama you do not say anything straight out," he said. "The play then loses its undercurrent,

But other elements in the scene bear equal witness to Rozov's skill its subtext, its second level. A play is a special type of literature. I can write I love you' and make it mean I hate you. The viewer understands.

> Rozov said he was convinced that American audiences would understand his world. "The type of person who starts a career and then becomes blind to everything else is, unfortunately, a type that exists everywhere, even in your country," he said.

[Writing in The New York Times, Frank Rich said "The Nest of he Wood Grouse" "turns out to be as square and slick - and, in its best passages as enjoyable and well-acted — as a Broadway domestic comedy of the old school." Benedict Nightingale, also in The Times, wrote that it "seems wrong" for Rozov's play to be part of a season of East European "dissident" work, but concluded that "It's a refreshingly brave play, worth discovering by any American who wants to know what's being thought and even said in the capital city of the ideological foe."]

Rozov is not unknown in the United States. An early play of his "Always Living," which he wrote while recuperating from a war wound, was made into the film "The Cranes Are Flying," which was a major success in the United States in the 1960s, and another of his plays. "From Night Till Noon," was staged at the University of Kansas. He has visited the United States several times, he said, Rozov was invited to be in New York for the opening of "The Nest of the Wood Grouse" but his trip fell victim to the far-reaching freeze on Soviet-American relations that has been in force in Moscow since the invasion of Alghanistan and has intensified in recent months. For Rezov, however, the United States means, first and foremost, musicals. "I love musicals most of all," he said with fervor, "Delightful! This is your creation, your achievement, and in this you are the

Ways of Living the Château Life Around France

UIMPER. France — On Friday night, it was dinner with Count Christian de Broc and his fiancée. a painter and the daughter of a neighboring aristocrat, at their favorite local bistro. The next day the count borrowed a friend's outboard-motorboat to run us along the Odet River, an estuary bordering his and other large private properties, lined for miles by woods brightened by giant pink mododendrons. On Sunday, a local family held a daylong christening party in a green-andwhite striped tent on the lawn, while we indulged in some traditional sightseeing.

We were staying, for 250 francs a night (about $30), in the Château Le Perennou, a crenellated, mullioned 16th-century pile reshaped over the centuries by idiosyncratic de Brocs. We prowled the grounds at leisure. with no crowds or guides, admiring the ruined Roman bath by the river and the rare trees planted a century ago by the count's great-uncle. The 18th-century master bedroom had a soothing view across the grounds to the river, as well as an adjoining modern be spartan or run to private tennis courts and stables. But the cost usually compares favorably with modern hotel accommodation in France, and for families, big château bedrooms are almost always a bargain.

There are two approaches. The easy one equires getting a new guidebook to French historic buildings that have been turned into hotels. Titled "Guide de la Vie de Château," by the French food critic and travel writer Philippe Couderc, it is a well-organized and opinionated listing of 200 chateau-hotels that you can call up and book

Another approach is the one described above in Brittany, through a new Paris-based travel association called Demeures Club. Run by the energetic Bertrand Laffillé, 33, it aims to provide a flow of congenial paying guests to nearly 50 French châteaus normally not open to the public. As a result, the guests are usually alone in the château with

The club is one of a number of new organizations that offer accommodation in chateaus and historic buildings. The difference with Demeures Club, Laffille says, is that it offers not "a disguised form of traditional hotels," as he puts it, but a real welcome. To avoid classification as commercial establishments under French tax law, the properties do not have restaurants, but often the owner is willing to organize a meal whose costs he shares with his guests.

"The role of the club is to fit people and destinations so that it's comfortable for both guest and host," says Laffillé. "Whatever you want, a quiet weekend where you have the wing of an austere château to yourself, or a busy weekend with an energetic hostess, or a relaxed weekend in a château and working farm run by a young couple, or just spectacular accommodations near the Riviera, we can

Laffillé is hoping to extend the service to other countries in Europe. "Why do people always want to travel to exotic places when the most interesting change possible involves entering another world, which may be only 100 kilometers away by road but is centuries distant in history and social outlook?" he

He also has a sense of theater. He recently sent a musician friend to a château for a week of solitary rehearsing before a concert then persuaded the owner to take, instead of payment, two concerts on demand. The first produced a great party in Paris, the second convinced the chatelaine to start a small annual music series in her chateau.

To keep the personal contact that per-suaded the circle of château owners to open their doors, Laffille insists on having clients join his club, which costs 800 francs(about 590) and requires a little chat with a member or with Laffillé. The chat — partly to screen out applicants likely to pocket silver snuff boxes, partly a get-acquainted session to help match client and château — sounds a nuisance, but Laffille can make things happen fast. During this year's French Open tennis tournament in Paris, Don Budge, the former American tennis star, met Laffille on a Tuesday and by Sunday was heading out of Paris for a 10-day swing through Demeures

Count de Broc, whose château is near Quimper, seems to embody the spirit of the Laffille venture. The youngest son in a family of 10, he went to work for a French publisher in Canada because his father had warned that death duties on the estate would oblige the family to sell.

Indeed, at his death in 1980, no one wanted to take the 15-room château as part of the inheritance — except Christian. "I was dreaming of keeping it, these buildings are part of France's heritage, so I quit my job and came home to do whatever I had to do,"

Since then, he has taken a plumbing course (a key skill in châtean-owning), befriended the local tourism council, boned up on trees so he can conduct tours around the botanical gardens he is slowly reclaiming from the weeds and, finally, decided to take in guests through Demeures Club.

Some château owners are pleased, others are irate, particularly those who have been taking in guests secretly (to avoid taxes) and fear the competition. The local tourist officials are delighted. "I'm willing to do anything to save the property, except compromise aesthetically by defacing the architecture," de Broc says. Most important, he enjoys explaining his cherished inheritance to visitors.

For him and for Laffille, the visits are a two-way exchange, giving visitors a peek at the rarified world of country noblemen— and giving the château dwellers a breath of fresh air. "Too many people who live in these places think that just living here is all they need to know about the world," de Broc said.

Laffille is sharper-tongued: "So many people are outclassed by the property they inherit. What I'm looking for are theatrical properties, personable owners and slightly adventurous guests." He has a long list of new, unlikely friendships that have sprung up through the club, which he keeps secret. just as he refuses to divulge the club's list of châteaus, insisting that clients pass through the Paris office (at 5 Place du Marché Sainte-Catherine, Paris 4; tel: 271.15.93).

Similar organizations include Vicilles Maisons Françaises, at 93 Rue de l'Université. Paris 7, tel: 551.07.02, and Echanges Culturels, 40 Rue de Richelieu, tel: 260.07.82, both of which offer accommodations in selected châteaus, some not normally open to the public, and organize tours hroughout France.

HE well-researched, clearly presented I "Guide de la Vie de Château" is less ambitious and more direct, listing 200 chateaus all over France that operate as hotels. Couderc, whose weekly travel pages in the conservative newspaper Minute range from acerbic to enthusiastic, provides a personal view of each establishment, rather than stars. crossed cutlery or other symbols.

The most "cultural" château, he says, is the Hôtel de l'Angleterre in Paris, a former British embassy that appears in Proust and where Ernest Hemingway once stayed. The bedrooms are grandiose and memories di-vine, but Couderc prefers the nearby Relais Christine, a royal priory under Heary IV that has been modernized with flair and vegetables grown in her garden.

The most American chateau is what he calls the Château de la Chèvre d'Or, in Eze on the Riviera, which frames its pool over the Mediterranean in medieval cloisters.

Most snobbish? The Château du Besset, in

The Art of Vacationing

by Jane E. Brody

EW YORK - Vacations are supposed to be fun, relaxing, get-away-from-it-all times that restore the soul, if not the body and mind. Leisure-time experts say that for most people vacations are an essential ingredient in an emotionally well-balanced life, a time that helps to make work during the rest of the year enjoyable, or at least bearable. For those in emotionally intense professions, vacations can be vital to countering burnout. And for some workaholics, who might otherwise work themselves into an early grave, vacations can even be lifesaving.

So why do so many vacationers fail to have a good time and return as stressed, anxious or depressed as they were before they left? Researchers who have studied the pleasures and pitfalls of vacationing Americans have isolated many reasons. Based on their findings - and sometimes on their personal vacation experiences as well - they can offer suggestions that may help to improve your vacation. Here are some factors worth taking into consideration:

S TUDIES have shown that people, including many happily married couples, can have radically different ideas as to what a vacation entails. One might want to travel to exotic places or race around sightseeing, while the other wants nothing but the pleasure of sleeping late, puttering around the house or lounging on the beach. One wants constant stimulation, while the other seeks peace and quiet and freedom from the need to interact with others. One wants family togetherness, and the other wants only the opportunity to pursue his own interests, which may be thwarted by work and family commitments the rest of the year. One wants every moment to be carefully planned, while the other relishes the idea of uncommitted time. When two such people try to vacation together, the mix can be emotional dyna-

Rather than trying to force people with different vacation goals to adopt styles that are more alike, which could mean that neither one has a good time, other accommodations can be made. Dr. Paul Rosenblatt, a social psychologist at the University of Minnesota, suggests such possibilities as making moderate compromises or taking turns at pursuing individual goals, finding a mutually satisfying activity, taking separate vacaions, modifying expectations or simply talking through one's expectations to reduce surprise and consequent irritation.

Rosenblatt also cautions against letting the "American togetherness ethic" min your relationship; an otherwise healthy relationship should not be threatened when one partner wants to do something without the other. Last summer, for example, my sons and I took a nature trip to Ecuador, which my husband opted to skip because he con-sidered the conditions too primitive. For our family time together, before the big trip we all spent a week in a "civilized" cabin on an American river, which was much more to his

A co-worker, whose family and other in-terests seem to have locked him into a pattern of several one-week vacations each year, says: "Going on vacation for a week is al-most worse than not going at all. You start off exhausted from the weeks of prepara-tion: it's Tuesday before you really feel as if you're on vacation, and on Wednesday you start worrying about the fact that it will soon

Some people start their vacations emo-tionally as well as physically the moment they lock their front doors. For them, even a three-day weekend can have the effect of a three-week vacation. Most people, however, take longer to unwind and need a minimum of two weeks away from their routine to feel truly restored. Decide which kind of person you are, and plan accordingly.

If possible and financially feasible, consider saving overtime and working during paid holidays, and add them to your allotted vacation. A survey by Psychology Today magazine indicated that people who take a lot of vacation time - six weeks or more a year - tend to be less troubled by fatigue, irritability and anxiety when they are home. Long vacations were found to be especially useful to people whose jobs are emotionally holics, whom Rosenblatt says are as likely to be found in farming as in business.

To worksholics, forced leisure can sometimes be more stressful than no vacation at all. Rosenblatt suggests letting them take work along and keeping vacations short to reduce conflict and stress. However, other experts have found that workaholics often get caught in a vicious cycle of declining efficiency and increasing hours of work; for them, breaking the cycle with a vacation can make the difference between continued productivity and a total breakdown. Although a trip to a remote place (perhaps where phones and mail service and even electricity are limited or nonexistent) may seem anathe to a workaholic, many find that once they get there, they can actually begin to enjoy their total break from work. For those who are less compulsive about their time, Rosenblatt suggests allowing a day or two at either end of your vacation to take care of last-minute details before you leave and to come back down to earth, unpack, do the laundry and perhaps sort the mail when you get home. He also warns against scheduling things too tightly on va-cation and driving yourself to the limits of your energy because "fatigue and high expectations are setups for problems." The advent of credit cards has allowed millions of Americans to "borrow" from future earnings to pay for vacations that are actually beyond their means. This can add considerable stress to postvacation time. On the other hand, some people hold so tight to their purse strings, even when money isn't in short supply, that they diminish the comfort and pleasure of vacationing companions.

If money tends to be a source of conflict, negotiate ahead of time how much the family or individuals can spend each day or week, and give youngsters an "allowance" they can spend as they choose without parental inter-

A PERSON who always needs to feel in charge is likely to bridle under the direction of a trip leader or the schedule of a prearranged tour. On the other hand, someone who becomes readily distressed by a glitch in plans - such as a vehicle breakdown, lost reservation, finding the main attraction closed on the only day you're in that city - might do a lot better with a guide whose job is to handle such details. A guide can be especially valuable in a foreign country where you don't speak the language. when in a remote area or when traveling with small children or elderly relatives who have limited coping skills and wear yours down quickly as well.

The Psychology Today survey identified six needs that motivate vacationers, relief of ment; family togetherness; exotic advent self-discovery, and escape. Those who n enjoyed their vacations tended to relish citement and adventure, enjoyed meet people and were not overly concerned v comfort and convenience. Those who for the least pleasure in their vacations tende expect the impossible: living out a wild i tasy or returning home a new person.

Perfectionists also can have a hard t vacationing away from home where evithing is not going to be exactly as they w it. They tend to make other vacationers reable as well because of their constant. satisfactions. If your spouse is such a pers you have several choices: Learn to ignore complaints; vacation alone, or restrict y joint vacations to first-class hotels that within easy driving distance. The hassles: airline travel can provide ideal fodder

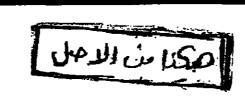

Perhaps the most common difficulty p ple have on family or group vacations is sudden need to interact with others 24 ho a day. For many people, too much togeth ness is stifling and overwhelming. Find w. to escape or achieve psychological distar.

Exercise alone or take a long walk.

HE humorist Robert Benchley o said. There are two classes of travel first class, and with children." On trips w small children, don't try to overload the with activities or travel as far as you might you were just two adults. Rosenblatt s gests ignoring the airline's suggestion board first, since that often means uyuse keep small children quiet on a hot plane 45 minutes before it takes off. For te are important to the enjoyment of all, vises Dr. Mary Ann Bartusis, a psychiat. at the Medical College of Pennsylvania Philadelphia.

Many people enjoy long visits with tended family, but for others it is a grin-ar bear-it situation. If you find vacationing, the homes of parents or in-laws hard to ta yet you want this family time together, | range to stay at a nearby hotel, motel, cal or home — some people arrange house changes — and schedule the family gath

If you do stay with relatives or shar summer residence with another family, Bartusis recommends that you arrange advance who is to do the cooking, shopp and cleaning up, when mealtimes will scheduled and who will pay for what. Plan feed small children first, so that the adu can have a more relaxed time at the tat Don't assume that grandparents will want baby-sit.

What's Doing in Los Angeles: Around and About the Olympics

by Robert Lindsey

OS ANGELES - After years of preparations, the Olympic flame is scheduled to be lighted atop the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum on July 28, signaling the start of 16 days of competition by athletes from around the

To welcome visitors, Los Angeles International Airport has been expanded and mod-emized; Olympic flags and bunting have been raised around the city, and from its recently revitalized downtown area to its diverse ethnic neighborhoods, a sense of excitement is growing in Los Angeles about the XXIII Olympiad.

Although the tickets to the finals in most events and some of the other most popular items on the Olympic schedule have been sold out for months, officials of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee say they expect tickets to be available for those who decide at the last moment to come to Los Angeles.

Seats are also still available for many events at the Olympic Arts Festival, a cornu-copia of dance, music, theater and art exhibitions being held in conjunction with the sports competitions. And even if you decide to come to Los Angeles for the Olympics and not buy a ticket, you will be able to see some events — the marathon, yachting and certain cycling events - free.

Olympic tickets are being sold by the committee at nine locations, including the Arco Plaza at Sixth and Flower Streets in downtown Los Angeles and the Beverly Center at La Cienega and Beverly boulevards. The average price is $18, although some are as little as $3 for earlier competition in lesser-known sports. Additional sales offices are in shopping centers in Newport Beach, Pasadena, West Covina, Oxnard, Torrance, the San Fernando Valley and southeastern Los Angeles.

Only cash or national credit cards are accepted; no checks. For information on ticket availability, call 213-741-6789.

The official outlets are not the only sources of Olympic tickets. Because many people apparently ordered tickets by mail last year expecting to make a profit as scalpers, plenty of seats are available from ticket brokers, including some to such desired events as the opening and closing ceremonies and finals in gymnastics, swimming, boxing and track and field. Be wary, however, of paying much above the face value of the tickets. So many amateur speculators thought they could strike it rich that there is a glut of tickets on the market.

LTHOUGH rooms in most of the city's A best-known hotels are booked for the Olympics, early fears of a severe bousing shortage and price gouging have abated because of new hotel construction and a smaller demand for rooms than was expected. Hotel operators say they expect some rooms still to be available within the city and in suburban communities after the Olympics start. They advise visitors, however, to get a confirmed reservation-rather than coming to' Los Angeles without one.

The Greater Los Angeles Visitors and Convention Bureau publishes a list of hotels and motels, which can be obtained as part of an Olympics information packet. For information, call 213-239-0200.

An Olympic Information Center is operated by the bureau in the Arco Center, and there is a branch office at the Tom Bradley International Terminal at Los Angeles International Airport, the largest of several additions to the airport that were completed in time to accommodate Olympic visitors. Youth Hostels Inc., 1502 Palos Verdes Drive North, San Pedro, California 90710 (213-831-8846), will help students looking for a place to stay during the Olympics. Limited numbers of parking sites for recreational vehicles will be available at beaches for $30 a night. Call 800-822-2267 for reservations in California; from elsewhere in the United States the reservation number is 800-824-

The Biltmore, a nicely restored, 60-yearold hotel built in the Spanish-Italian Renaissance style in downtown Los Angeles (213-624-1011), will be the hub of much Olympic activity as headquarters for the International Olympic Committee. Rates for two: $115 to $125. A few blocks away are the five glass columns comprising the Westin Bonaventure (213-624-1000), one of the architectural landmarks of the revitalized central business district. Rates: $125 to $141 until Aug. 12, $130 to $146 after that.

The recently opened Sheraton Premiere (800-325-3535) is an attractive hotel near the Hollywood Freeway and the Universal City theme park. Rates: $99 to $200. If you are not a movie star but want to sample part of the lifestyle of one, you might select the venerable pink palace, the Beverly Hills Hotel (213-276-2251). Rates: $145 to $225. Nearby, and more elegant, are the tree-shaded Bel Air Hotel (213-472-1211), $160 to $250, and the Beverly Wilshire (213-275-4282), which is close to the shops of Beverly Hills. Rates for a double: $168.

In Westwood, the college neighborhood near the University of California, the Westwood Marquis (213-208-8765) offers large suites for $140 to $170. The St. Regis Motor Hotel at 11955 Wilshire Boulevard in West Los Angeles (213-477-6021) is typical of many more modest motels in the city. Rates for two: $40.

M OST visitors find that a car is essential for touring Southern California, but if you visit the city during the Olympics you may find it wise to park your car and rely on the bus. Serious traffic congestion has been forecast during the peak competition, especially in the area in and around the Coliscum and in Westwood. To reduce congestion, the Southern California Rapid Transit District has organized a special shuttle bus system for the Olympics. Officials are urging visitors to use it, especially when they are head-ed for either of those two neighborhoods. One-way fares for the shuttle service between downtown Los Angeles (First and Spring Streets) and several Olympic compe-tition sites will be $2, with an all-day pass available for $10.

Bookstores are filling up with an avalanche of new guides to Los Angeles, but the city's best may be the three-year-old "L.A. Access" (Access Press, $9.95), which fits in your pocket and is easy to read. Also valuable is the "Official Olympic Guide" published by Los Angeles Magazine, available throughout the city for $5.95.

THE Olympic Arts Festival is virtually a I nonstop cultural smorgasbord offering something for everyone. The current schedule, for example, includes the Theatre Sans Fil of Montreal and Giorgio Strehler's Picco-lo Teatro of Milan; the overall schedule includes dance companies from France, Japan and Mexico and more than 30 theatrical productions by companies from six comtries, including China and Australia. Tickets for operatic, dance and theatrical performances are available through Ticketmaster outlets, and a limited number are available at many events at the box office before curtain time. For ticket and scheduling information, call 213-741-7777.

At the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, 5905 Wilshire Boulevard (213-857-6373), besides its permanent collection and other special exhibits, there is a stunning exhibition running through Sept. 16 as part of the Arts Festival called "A Day in the Country." It features more than 120 paintings by Renoir, Gauguin, Monet and other French Impressionists. Open daily 9 A.M. to 6 P.M. Tickets, $4; $2 for children 6 to 11. Near the Coliseum, the County Museum of Natural History, 900 Exposition Boulevard (213-744-3411), is commemorating the Olympics with an exhibition of cars and other memorabilia from 1932, when the Open Tuesday through Sunday, 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. Tickets, $1.50; children free. Nearby, the California State Museum of Science and Industry, 700 State Drive (213-794-0101), recently opened a section devoted to aero-space; it remains the West's premier technol-ogy museum. Open daily 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. Free admission. Besides experiencing architectural rebirth with the construction of a thicket of new skyscrapers, downtown Los Angeles has emerged in recent years as a major center of art. There are hundreds of artists living in downtown lofts and a lively gallery scene. A symbol of this ferment is the "Temporary Contemporary," the warehouse-like interim quarters for the city's new Museum of Contemporary Art at 152 North Central Avenue (213-382-6622). On July 21 an exhibition will feature the automobile as seen through the eyes of contemporary artists. Through Jan. 6. Open Wednesday through Friday 11 A.M. to 8 P.M., Saturday through Tuesday, 11 A.M. to 6 P.M. Tickets, $3; $1.50 for students and people over 65.

Roy Yamaguchi, owner of 385 N., at 385 La Cienega Boulevard (213-385-6678), which is housed in a huge Art Deco building reminiscent of an ocean liner, calls his style "California French with Japanese overtones." At dinner recently, I started with a plate of seared salmon fillet in a sauce of corn and red peppers, grilled whitefish marinated in ginger, and a lemon tart. Dinner for two, with cocktails and wine, was $76, including tip.

A mile-and-a-half stretch of shops, boutiques, restaurants and galleries on Melrose Avenue in West Hollywood has become one of the city's liveliest spots recently, and the presence of Le Chardonnay, 8284 Meirose Avenue (213-655-8880), is almost worth a detour by itself. Specialties include grilled chicken in mustard sauce, bouillabaisse, and several yeal dishes, served in a setting of dark wood and brass. Dinner for two, about $80.

In downtown Los Angeles, Bernard's, run by Bernard Jacoupy in the Biltmore Hotel (213-624-1011), has had its ups and downs over the years, but has never been better than it has recently. Nouvelle cuisine with a California touch. Try the scallops wrapped in smoked salmon. Dinner for two: about $100. A few blocks away, Seventh Street Bistro, 815 West Seventh Street (213-627-1242), also features French cuisine in an appealing atmosphere, but some regulars say it isn't what it was before local food critics reviewed it favorably. For two: about $100.

Except for a constant ebb and flow of plainclothes policemen who were among the first to discover it, there isn't much atmosphere at Restaurant Ciros, 705 North Evergreen (213-269-5104), in the heart of the city's barrio. But you probably can't find much better Mexican food in Los Angeles, and the prices are reasonable. Dinner for two, including a couple of Mexican beers, costs less than $12.

Mon Kee, a modest-looking restaurant in Chinatown at 679 North Spring Street (213-628-6717), is credited with starting a boom in restaurants specializing in Chinese-style seafood, and it is still very popular. Crab, shrimp and scallops prepared in a variety of ways are best. About $32 for two.

If your itinerary includes soccer at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Cafe Jacoulet, 91 North Raymond Avenue in Pasadena (818-796-2233), might be a good place. Dinner for two, including a salad that changes with the seasons, salmon or charcoal-grilled duck in raspberry sauce, recently cost about $35, including a bottle of the house chardonnav.

Festival Time at Taormina

by Joan Dupont

AORMINA, Italy — The town of Taormina is set in sheer rock, eyeto-eye with Mount Eina, smoldering across the gulf. But in summer, Taormina's amphitheater — built by the Greeks and rebuilt by the Romans — is far more active than the usually slumbering volcano as the site of a series of festivals of theater, music and, especially, cinema.

This Saurday, 25,000 visitors, mostly Sicilians, converge on Taormina for the annual Festa per il Cinema. Films flicker on the mammoth screen set up in the amphitheater. and guest stars (mostly faces familiar to Italian TV audiences) perform for one night at the Notte delle Stelle - night of the stars. For a finale, there is a candle-lighting ceremony and a giddy procession down steep streets, to the sea, 650 feet below. Despite the vaguely religious overtones of the candlelight procession, it is a purely commercial operation that has been going for the last 30

The serious business begins with Taormina's annual film festival, the Festival Cinematografica Internazionale di Taormina, which runs this year to July 28. Guglielmo Biraghi, who has been the festival's director for 14 of its 15 years, described it as a mixture of art and spectacle. "We have to consider that we too are playing to a house of 25,000," he said.

The festival is a competitive event for feature films by directors who have not made more than two. Throughout the year, Biraghi scouts the international scene, coming up with a dozen films. Eastern Europe is usually well represented, and foreign films are shown with Italian subtitles.

Because its format limits the competition to films by relative beginners, Taormina can claim its share of "discoveries." Biraghi believes his was the first international festival to reveal the new wave of Australian filmmakers with Peter Weir's "Picnic at Hanging Rock" in 1979, and Steven Spielberg won the prize for best first film in 1973 with "Duel." Two years ago, two British films took the top prizes, heralding what is now regarded as a renaissance of the British film scene. Woody Allen's "Bananas" was a feature in Biraghi's first year.

Festival-goess participate in all Taormina's tourist activities, buying as many Sicilian puppets as anyone else, but leading lives somewhat apart. The four men and four women of the jury are lodged in the Sant' Andrea Hotel, by a small, breath-taking bay. Festival headquarters, and a scattering of VIPs, are at the San Domenica, a converted 15th century Dominican monastery with a cloistered garden. Directors of other festivals, filmmakers and the press stay at the Capotaormina, a modern hotel with elevators that go straight down to the beach.

At sunset, jitneys pick up hotel guests and wind up the ring road — the jasmine is heavy, the curves tortuous - for the evening's showings. Jury members, guest stars and tourists mingle after the film, when the serious night life starts. On the Corso Umberto, the road that runs through town, discos spring up for a season. Further along the Ionian coast, the soil takes on dark shades from Eina's lava and the legendary Aeolian islands spread out; Scylla and Charybdis are not far off. But festival guests rarely get beyond Taormina.

"A trip to Vulcano, what for?" asks Biraghi about the idea of visiting Etna. "It's hot and smells of sulfur. Besides, you can't leave the festival all by itself."

An indispensable management tool executed with incomparable elegance.

EER is, theoretically, a simple product: a fermented beverage made from water, barley malt (sprouted barley), hops and yeast. However, hundreds of variations are used to yield distinctive flavors.

Brewers in some countries, including the United States, use less-mait and add corn, which makes a lighter beer. Among the principal categories of beer are these:

Ale. Technically, the term refers to any beer made with a yeast that floats to the top during fermentation. Ales, in general, are relatively full-flavored and slightly higher in alcoholic content than beer, which is usually just under five percent by volume. Top-fermenting yeasts tend to produce a fruitier, more distinctive aroma, although brewers can overcome that if they want a milder product. Ales are not aged like some beers.

Lager, Any bottom-fermented beer that has been aged, usually from one to six weeks. All leading American beers are lagers. Porter. A dark leger. The color and extra Dayor come In toasting the malt before brewing. Porters are normally stronger in flavor and higher in alcoholic content than regular lager. Stout. A dark ale made with toasted malt. Normally stronger than regular ale.

Pilsaer. A generic term based on a style of Bohemian brewing developed in Pilsen, now in Czechoslovakia, in the 19th century. Pilsners are made with water that is hard but not alkaline. The term has little meaning today other than to indicate a pale golden beer. All the principal American beers are pilsner-style lagers. So-called light beers are light pilsner-style lagers with about a third fewer calories and at least 20 percent less alcohol than regular beer.

Bock. Traditionally a strong German dark beer. In Germany bocks are brewed in the spring to launch the new beer season.

Usually extremely dense, they are made with roasted mails, although some pale bocks can be found. They are almost always rich, with a distinct malty flavor.

Microchip Helps Ford Use 'Magic-Cloud' Suspension

By MARSHALL SCHUON

New York Times Service

EW YORK — The lure has been there for years: the thought that an automobile should be able to ride on some sort of magic cloud, that a carpet of air would be far superior to the best steel springs. But it has been tried, with less than magical results.

For Cadillac, an air-suspension system led to a major recall and retrofitting in 1960. For Ford, a similar concept was abandoned on the test track in the late 1950s. But now, the microchip has come to the rescue, abetted by new materials and manufac-

Ford's 1984 Lincoln Mark VII and Continental both float on air, and the system appears to be as successful as it is sophisticat ed, with height sensors feeding ahead of its time,"

their information to a computer that controls distribution of air to the four intricately constructed "balloons" that serve as springs.

"I think air suspension was ahead of its time," said Buddy Chance, Ford's manager of suspension systems. "The technology just didn't exist. You didn't have the electronics. You didn't have methods of sealing the springs the way we do today."

And, he said, there was not the impetus that exists today. Year after year, the automakers have been paring away weight to increase fuel economy, and lighter cars are the stuff of nightmares for the men charged with preserving what has come to be known as the luxury-car ride.

With lighter cars, the passengers and cargo represent a greater part of the total weight on the spring. That means that a spring stiff enough to handle a full load can give the driver of an empty car a ride that is too firm, while a softer spring may lack load

T 3,625 pounds (1,645 kilograms), the 1984 Mark VII is 350 pounds lighter than its predecessor, and about half a ton lighter than the behemoths of old.

Mr. Chance said: "We had to lower the spring rates on the lighter cars, and if we lowered the spring rate, the vehicle no longer would have the load capacity that we wanted. So we had to look for some sort of system that could match the weight-carrying capability, and the air-suspension system sort of fell out as a

Basically, he said, the problem in the past has always been air leaks, with the compressor powered by the engine and taking in air from the engine compartment. "You had mechanical valves for adding air to the springs and exhausting it," he said. "They would freeze. They just had a number of problems with a system like that. Now we have one-piece plastic lines running from the air compressor to the springs. The compressor itself is driven by an electric motor, and the height sensors are all electronic."

The heart of the system is a computer, separate from the microprocessors that control other vehicle functions. In addition to providing the sort of ride that Ford wanted by constantly changing the spring rate, it automatically levels the car every time that side-to-side or front-to-rear loads change. To do that, the computer feeds its signals to the compressor and to five solenoid-operated valves to provide the right amount of air to the springs

The system also monitors signals from the ignition, doors and braking system to modify its response to momentary conditions.

For instance, the computer will not attempt to correct the height of the front end when it has dipped as a result of braking.

In addition, the computer is programmed to delay corrections while driving until a given requirement is present for 45 seconds longer than it is absent. It keeps a running total of the "ups" and "downs" to determine what kind of action to take, eliminating unwanted corrections caused by road roughness or banked turns but compensating for fuel consumed and the effect of varying air temperatures in the springs.

Chrysler Net, Sales Hit Highs

Quarter's Profit Soared by 159%

DETROIT --- Chrysler Corp., which was close to bankruptcy four years ago, said Thursday that its second-quarter profit soared 159 percent to an all-time high on re-cord sales that increased 47 per-

The automaker earned $802.9 million, or $6.48 a share, in the quarter, up from $310.3 million, or $2.41 a share, a year earlier. The quarter's profit was more than the company had ever earned in any previous quarter - or in any previous year.
Sales rose to a record $5.25 bil-

Japan Bid to Invade Market Fails

U.S. Companies Are Ahead in Computer Field

By Andrew Pollack

New York Times Service TOKYO - Since the beginning of the personal-computer business about seven years ago, Japanese companies have been expected to invade the rich U.S. market and take a big share of it, as they did with automobiles and

But the invasion never materialized. And many Japanese executives are increasingly pessimistic that it will ever happen.

"For the next 10 or 15 years, Japan has no choice but to follow the American lead," said Kikuo Okuda, editor of Business Computer News.

Lagging Japanese computer technology, especially in soft-ware, combined with weak marketing and cultural differences, have kept Japanese manufactur-ers a step behind the Americans. In Japan, most computers are produced by large, well-estab-lished companies, which function best once a market has stabilized. But this has not happened in personal computers.

The change is so rapid for an average Japanese manufacturer.

it's hard to keep abreast of it." said Kazuo Saitoh, corporate director and deputy general man-ager of the instruments group of Sharp Corp., a Japanese maker of business machines and electric appliances. "Although we know we have to do something, most Japanese companies are not able to do it," he said.

As a result, many of Japan's premier high-technology companies, having failed to penetrate the U.S. market with their products, are using other strategies. Some are supplying products to be sold by U.S. companies. Kyocera Corp. makes the popular Radio Shack Model 100 por-

Other Japanese companies are concentrating on the peripheral equipment for computers, such not require software and are eas- . ier to market.

Our company has capabiliues at both ends, memory and terminals, but not in the middle." said Toshihiko Yamashita. president of Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., the world's largest consumer-electronics compa-

The result is that the Japanese are creeping into the U.S. market invisibly, rather than invading. U.S. imports of computer-re-lated products from Japan more than doubled last year to $1.5 billion, according to Commerce Department figures, turning a U.S. bilateral trade surplus in that area into a deficit. Most of the increase is believed to come from peripheral equipment and Personal-computer shipments by Japanese companies in 1983 rose to 1.1 million machines, a 50-percent increase from 762,000 in 1982, according to the Japan Electronics Industry Develop-ment Association. Exports more than tripled to 256,000 units, from 79,000.

Still, Japanese companies had only about a 5-percent market share in the United States in 1983 and would like to establish strength in selling personal com-puters. Selling only computer equipment or selling through other companies is less profit-

In addition, personal computers account for a large chunk of the so-called desktop-computer market, which includes sophisticated word processors and other microprocessor-based computers. As personal computers increasingly become part of com-plex office-automation systems, Japanese companies without a strong market presence will become only small suppliers for these networks.

One reason for the Japanese lag is that they have been unable to keep up technologically with smaller, innovative companies in the United States.

The Japanese personal-com-puter market began in 1979, more than two years behind the U.S. market, and the market here (Continued on Page 13, Col. 2)

Creusot's Board Resigns, Cites Paris Obstinacy

By Axel Krause

onal Herald Tribune PARIS - Didier Pineau-Valencienne, the chairman of Creusot-Loire, the French heavy-engineering company, and his board resigned on Thursday in protest against the government's apparent unwillingness to negotiate a solu-tion to the company's financial cri-

Mr. Pineau-Valencienne will retain his other positions in the Empain Schneider group controlling Creusot-Loire, including that of chairman of the Schneider SA holding company, a company

Creusot-Loire was placed in receivership on June 28.

The eight-member board resigned, effective Tuesday, because "it was definitely bopeless to seek cooperation, which the government did not want, and left those responsible unable to exercise their re-sponsibilities," Mr. Pineau-Valencienne said

He said that he was saddened at the unwillingess of the government to negotiate a rescue plan that he said could have helped restore the company's finances. The board in its statement said that during the past four months the company management had not been able to meet "directly or indirectly, to express their views to the ministers" responsible for the company.

The immediate problem was the apparent unwillingness of the government to deal with a special administrator named by the Paris Commercial Court last week. The administrator, Hubert Lafont, who was proposed by Creusot-Loire, was asked by the court to act as an intermediary with a view to seeking a negotiated settlement to the company's crisis.

However, government officials immediately challenged the move on the grounds that he would have no powers to settle any outstanding issues, such as deciding on liquidation, sale or reorganization of the company's assets.

The government has repeatedly urged that the court name a receiver empowered to act on behalf of the company's board, a move that board resisted strongly. Govern-ment officials have never hidden their dislike for Mr. Pineau-Valencienne. "He is very stubborn and, we believe, not very competent," a minister in the new government of Prime Minister Laurent Fabius said Thursday, on the condition that he not be identified.

Industry sources said the board's resignation may facilitate the nego-tiations, because it was felt that a receiver would now be named and that it probably would be Mr. Lafont. Several leading state-owned and private companies have ex-pressed interest in acquiring some of the Creusot-Loire industrial in-

However, it was expected that it may take several days for the new government to react, as it only held its first meeting on Thursday. The minister responsible for handling the Creusot-Loire matter will be Edith Cresson, former foreign trade minister, and now minister of industry reorganization and foreign trade, government sources

NYSE, Amex Consider 24-Hour Trading Day The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The New York Stock Exchange has said that it is beginning a study of a possible move to round-the-clock trading because of the growing international nature of the securities business. The American Stock Exchange, meanwhile, said it was "taking a look" at an extended trading day. . Neither of the exchanges set a timetable for the studies. At the National Association of Securities Dealers, which operates the over-the-counter markets, a spokesman said that officials of the securities organization could not be reached for comment. Stock trading has been conducted between 10 A.M. and 4 P.M. New York time on the NYSE since 1974, hours also followed at the Amex and in the over-the-counter man, said Wednesday that a move to 24-hour trading would only be considered after extensive consultation with member securities firms, investing institutions and companies whose stock is listed on the exchange. The study would be aimed at determining the costs of round-the-clock trading and assessing the benefits. "The review of trading hours is part of an on-going program to reflect the increasing international nature of the exchange and its desire to better serve our customers, Mr. Phelan said. European markets are well into their trading day when the NYSE opens, and markets in the Far East open shortly after the NYSE closes. Earlier this month, the NYSE board unanimously voted to remain open for the first time ever on election day this year, saying at the time it wanted to "increase opportunities for investors worldwide to participate in the marketplace." The NYSE is the largest ex-

BIS Says Bank Lending To Third World Rises

By Carl Gewirtz nal Herold Tribune

PARIS - International bank ending to the world's less affluent countries increased much more sharply in last year's second half than formerly reported, according to data published Thursday by the Bank for International Settle-

The latest figures from the Basel-based BIS, which is the official monitor of the market, show that new lending to countries outside its reporting area amounted to about $8.4 billion — or 43 percent more the developing countries in Asia.
The BIS attributed "the strengthening of the underlying rate of growth of lending" to a "spectacular" acceleration of deposits with the banks as well as economic recovery in the developed world and the austerity efforts of some major borrowing countries. As a result, it noted, "there were no signs that interna-tional debt problems were becom-ing more widespread than before."

The BIS reporting countries con-stitute the most industrialized nations of North America, Japan and Western Europe. The large increase in leading to outside countries—to $28.1 billion from the $19.7 billion reported in April — is due to the fact that the BIS semiannual study of the maturity breakdown of inter- year compared with 54.4 percent national bank lending published

The major difference between the two sets of reports is that the solidated figures for most banks in the reporting area — giving much greater coverage of lending by their affiliates in offshore centers than is available for the quarterly survey.

Thus, the quarterly data showed lending to developing countries in Asia as having risen a scant $1.4 billion between the end of June and than had been previously estimat-ed. The bulk of this increase was to the new report indicates that it rose the end of December last year while $6.1 billion.

The most significant feature of last year's increase is that more than half of it was in short-term

Sir George Jefferson, BT's chairman, blamed the fall in profit on a live years. Charges on domestic two-year price freeze imposed by calls and phone rentals are to rise the government on most of BT's phone services. The freeze ended last November, when BT raised average phone charges 2.9 percent. In For the current year, Scrimgeour, Kemp-Gee & Co., a broker cent. advising the government on the planned share sale, forecast that BT's profit will surge to £1.38 billion. That figure compares with the £1.32 billion forecast earlier this month by Hoare Govett Ltd., another broker advising the government. Hoare also predicted that BT's annual profit growth would average 12 to 14 percent over the next five years.

To attract investors, BT is spending about £50 million on advertisprices.

2 Concerns Plan Swiss

The London-based European Banking Co. and Bacardi Capital Ltd. of Bermuda have announced finance department. plans to form a Swiss finance company. The new company, EBC (Schweiz) AG, is expected to be granted a license to operate within the next few weeks.

EBC will have a controlling interest in the new joint venture that will be located in Zurich. It initially is to specialize in portfolio management, fund management, lending against securities, foreign-exchange operations and other related financial services. The move represents EBC's entry to the Swiss market. The London-based EBC has seven member banks: Amsterdam-Rotterdam Bank NV, Creditanstalt-Bankverein, Midland Bank, Société Générale (France), Banca Commerciale Italiana SpA, Deutsche Bank AG and Societe Generale de Banque SA.

Bacardi Capital Ltd., EBC's partner, is the principal investment and financial arm of Bacardi International and Bacardi & Co., all subsidiaries of the Bermuda-based Bacardi Group.

Dr. Axel Fundulus has been appointed general manager of EBC (Schweiz). He is to remain in Zurich where he previously worked for the Swiss subsidiary of Girard

Stanislas Yassukovich, deputy chairman and group chief executive of EBC, and Rainer Kahrmann, executive director, are to represent the European Banking Group on the new company's board. Brewster Righter, managing director of Bacardi Capital and se-

THE ENGINEER OF HUMAN SOULS

By Joseph Skyorecky. 571 pp. $17.95. Knopf, 201 East 50th Street, New York. N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Richard Eder

E MIGRATION is a flight from one planet to another; exile is an orbital shot. Launched at great speed out of an unbearable homeland, the exile chooses freedom and a new life; yet years go by and, whatever his new attachments, in some part of himself he is still

The Czech writer Joseph Skvorecky calls
"The Engineer of Human Souis" an entertainment. It is, in places, so entertaining that it would be dangerous to read it without laughing aloud; in other places it is sad or dismaying. What he has really written, though, is an epic of his country and its exiles.

Epic is a foreboding word. But Skvorecky has accomplished it with all the talent that he and his fellow Czech writers seem to possess for the particular, for a fruitful irony, for an indignation teetering upon a sense of its own absurdity, and for a meditative discursiveness that fixes both sides of our world's political equation with a mild but pitiless clarity.

Both sides. The new world, the free West, offers a lavish hope to the exile, opportunities of all kinds, a truce with his fellows; everything that the human requires, in fact, except memory. The struggles of the old country, the de-feats, despairs and oppressions are to be reject-ed for every possible reason, except one — memory, again.

The novel is long, spans 40 years and shifts
— sometimes within a single sentence and usually without warning — from World War II to the present and halfway back to the post-staligist thaws. Skypnecky has centered on a Stalinist thaws. Skyorecky has centered on a calm, middle-aged novelist-professor, comfortably settled outside of Toronto. His name is Smiricky, and the resemblance to the author is not coincidental.

Smiricky is a kind of revolving lantern, picking out his past and his present. He ruminates on the heroisms and mock-heroics of his friends and antagonists, their short and long terms, the finely winding path that so many have traced between expedience and resis-tance, between a hopefulness that finds itself contaminated by opportunism and a princi-pled refusal that coarsens into despair.

His memories go back to his youth in a small Czech town, flirting with the local girls, showing off, joining a group of incompetent sabo-teurs against the occupying Germans. They go on, through the Stalinist years, into the thaw, the 1968 crackdown, and the exodus. These memories are interspersed with the lives of the Czech exiles in Toronto.

Smiricky teaches literature to university students whose minds are as new-minted as their stereos, though less distinctly voiced. Discussing "The Confession," the Costa-Gavras film about Stalinist purges of Eastern European Communist leaders, Smiricky mentions that he knew the wife of one of the characters. "Was she an actress too?" a student asks. History has no more weight to these young people than its representation in a movie or a TV show.

And yet, he loves his Canada: the ease, the hopefulness, the decency, the abundance; he falls in love with the glossiest of his students. "I feel wonderful. I feel utterly and dangerously

N wonderful in this wilderness land," he says.

And when a student, caught plagiarizing, miscrably awaits punishment, he reflects:

"Life had long since immunized me against the temptation to inform on anyone, regardless of what authority demanded it. My rehuctance is as impregnable as the Iron Curtain. I lived too long in a country where even the most pristing truth, once reported to the becomes a life." necomes a lie."

That may come closest of anything said or written in these 20 years to defining the peculiar temper of the Czechoslovak flowering; both in its pre-1968 stages and, later, in the literature of exile. No other Western people has wielded truth with such modesty.

Over the 40 years of Smiricky's memories, everything and everyone is transformed. A priest he goes to for refuge after his anti-Nazi-sabotage is discovered, rebuffs him; years later he turns up as a captain in the Communist secret police. The Nazi factory commandant who catches him, on the other hand, turns our to be a member of the resistance. Pro-Nazi collaborators emerge as Communist appararemarkably to show its alture. Others float and prosper, no matter what.

Perhaps the sharpest and most comical portraits are those of the exiles. They are divided dozens of different ways; the single funniest passage in the book concerns a fundamental production of the concerns a fundamental product of the concerns are the concerns and the concerns are the concerns and the concerns are the concerns are the concerns and the concerns are t passage in the book concerns a turious debate over an underground book. The older exiles want the refugee Czech publisher to ban it because of its rough language; others, defending it, find themselves employing Marxist terminology about its "positive" qualities. The publisher, a woman who simply loves books and is one of this book's most sympathetic characters, sticks up blindly for freedom.

There are perpetual schemes. One exile dreams of persuading everybody in Czechoslovakia to buy 10 boxes of matches at the same time; this, he thinks, would wreck the year's economic plan. Tourists pour through from Prague, and many of them are amateur spies; blackmailed by the police, and laughably in-

The most moving personage is Veronika, a student, attractive, intelligent and witty. She is taken up by rich Canadian friends, becomes the girlfriend of their son; but she cannot get 1968 out of her mind. She is sad and bitter; she conducts absurd acts of protest such as releasing a noise-making balloon at a Russian folk concert. And finally, almost against her own will, she returns. The last word from her possessing an endless echo — is a telegram received by Smiricky:

"IM A FOOL STOP VERONIKA."

"The Engineer of Human Souls" — the title is an ironic reference to the Stalinist notion of the writer's function -is a treasure, but has its flaws. In form it is an accumulation of materials set - apart from skips backwards and forwards - in chronological order. The accumulation is massive, and it tends, in its effect. to be repetitious and excessive.

Amnesia With Reagan

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — On television we see President Reagan in a cave. It is the Mammoth Cave, one of the great caves in the United States. The TV news reader says the president has come there to create a photo opportunity."

Here is Reagan on television again. He is looking at a bald eagle. The president and the eagle are in the same room enjoying "a photo opportunity," according to the TV news voice.

The aim is to fill American minds with pictures suggesting that Reagan loves nature, or, in the current political jargon, is "a friend of

odic alterations in his political image were always followed by talk of a new Nixon." Are Republican juxtapositions of president, cave of each "new Nixon," Nixon's image specialists implicitly conceded that there had been an old Nixon with distressing flaws.

Reugan's designers make no such concession. They are not as respectful of the electorate as Nixon's were. In fact, the president has a very inferior record on environmental issues and has never demonstrated much curiosity about them. The depth of his interest may be judged from his observation during the 1980 campaign that trees were responsible for air pollution.

His environmental policy has been characterized by a reluctance to do anything that would create difficulty for the business community. It is entirely possible to defend this position with persuasive argument. The president of the cave and the eagle, however, is not defending a sensibly thought-out policy: he is being used to deceive us into thinking that he is what he. in fact, is not.

In Nixon's era, there was an assumption that the voters had memory. If to gain votes a politician had to campaign against his own previ-ously held convictions, he would have to explain to the electorate. which was thought to have memory, what had occasioned his change of heart.

One problem, of course, was that, having made such a fuss about coming off the old policy, it might be impossible to resume it after elections were over.

Life seems much easier in the Reagan era. The working assumption now appears to be that the electorate has no memory at all.

If this is the case, the Republicans don't have to put the president on the stump to make the difficult argument for environmental policies that give the edge to business development. All they need to do is blandly suggest that Reagan has been "a friend of the environment" all along. (After the election, of course, he can return to his original position with no discomfort whatever to consistency.)

Thus the "photo opportunity" president in cave, president with campaign engineers trying to create eagle — replaces reasoned debate. There is no necessity for creating "a new Reagan." Who remembers anymore that the Reagan of the Obviously not. With the creation cave and the eagle is the same Reagan who once accused trees of polluting the air and whose advice for dealing with acid rain has been 'study, study, study"?

Dealing with an electorate without memory, a politician can change his identity casually, as occasion demands, without apology, explanation or tedious debate.

This must be every politician's dream of paradise, for the problem of how to do a complete turnaround from last year's suddenly unpopular positions has been the nightmare of politicians from the time of the Medes and Persians.
The interesting question is whether electorates are here to stay or whether the present one is merely a transient freak, created by a passing boredom with public affairs and intensified by Reagan's uncanny power to make a thousand pictures seem worth more than a single thought.

Ominously for Democrats, everybody's memory suddenly seemed to go into total recall over the weekend when Walter Mondale brought Bert Lance back from the dim mists of 1977. This is remarkable only when we reflect that very few remember what happened in Lebanon last year.

Japan's Butoh Dance Is Darkly Erotic

By Anna Kisselgoff New York Times Service

New YORK — Something dark and definite has stirred in the Japanese dance world and we are just beginning to feel the

Granted, there is nothing totally new in the arts nowadays. Nonetheless, the rise of the dance aesthetic in Japan that calls itself butoh signals a phenomenon unto itself. A compound of the grotesque and the beautiful, the nightmarish and the poetic, the erotic and the austere, the streetwise and the spiritual, butch is a highly theatrical form,

Although its roots can be traced to the 1960s and earlier, it is a trend that surfaced in the

Butoh groups have performed in Europe since 1978. The troupes did not reach the United States until 1982, when the American Dance Festival in Durham. North Carolina, invited Akaji Maro's Dai Rakuda Kan com-

Juku — a leading butch group headed by Ushio Amagatsu, a former member of the Maro company - will appear today and tomorrow in Purchase, New York, after having been to Paris, Toronto and the Olympic Arts Festival in Los Angeles.

pany. Now. Sankai

Perhaps we have been seeing butoh in the United States without being aware of it - just as Molière's bourgeois gentilhomme found he had been speaking prose without knowing it. The connection was very clearly made recent-ly when Eiko and Koma, who have presented their pieces in New York since 1976, performed at the American Dance Festival shortly after Sankai Juku appeared in Toronto.

What is butoh? Even the word has different connotations. Certainly it means dance, but it is used in opposition to another Japanese word for dance, buyo. Butch comes from a word having to do with ancient ritualistic dance.

Roku Hasegawa, the editor of the Japanese dance magazine, Dancework, has traced the origins of the present butch movement. The four chief — and male pioneers in Japan's contemporary dance movement, she said, were Baku Ishii, Michio Ito, Kenji Hinoki and Takaya Eguchi.

Ito is also known for his modern dance experiments in the United States between the two world wars before his return to Japan. Eguchi was the teacher of Tatsumi Hijikata — whose work from 1960 to 1979 is considered the first true manifestation of butoh. Kazua Ono, who performed briefly in New York a few years ago, is also considered a force

Most choreographers who head

butch groups today seem to have studied with Hijikata and Ono. Even Kei Takei, one of the first Japanese modern dancers of this generation to settle in New York. studied with Ono as well as Hinoki. Eiko and Koma joined Hijikata's company in Tokyo and later studied with Ono.

It is also significant that in 1972 Eiko and Koma went to West Germany to study with a disciple Mary Wigman (Manja Chmiel). Another point to retain is that Harald Kreutzberg, certainly a leading figure in German modern dance, had toured in Ja-

Japanese dancers, then, have been familiar with German dance expressionism for three generations. Those who would care to see butoh's imagery as related to images close to Wigman's or Kreutzberg's hearts would not be remiss. In fact, both butch and Pina Bausch's dance theater in West Germany are the leading examples of the new and current expressionism in dance.

Each group uses images that include pain and suffering, that are often violent and that shock. Both are clearly part of a theater in revolt. There are European critics who have drawn a connection between these trends and the countries in which they have grown - that is, the West Germany that emerged from World War II and the Japan that emerged from Hiroshima.

Butoh's primary theme seems, indeed, to be the creation and destruction of the universe. As different as butch groups are among themselves, they seem in-exorably drawn to the depiction of life forming on earth, seen as a painful process.

The cyclical nature of things is strongly felt. In this sense, butch has a nihilist strain. It deals with There is little room for free will.

Philosophically, butoh concentrates on metamorphosis and transcendence. The distinguishing mark of butoh style — the physical fact before us - is a body slowly changing shape. With extraordinary flow, the human form is remolded by each dancer to the point that mutation becomes normal. Eiko and Koma's hour-long "Grain" is especially startling in this respect.

Eiko's ability to make her body assume the unexpected form -- so that it no longer looks like a body — is striking, even disturbing be-cause it looks aberrational, nonhuman. Nude and bent with her head to the floor so that her posterior is raised upward, Eiko offers an unidentifiable abstract shape.

Nudity is common and is used not only for occasional brutal, nonsensual eroticism, but also to exhibit this control.

"Homage to Pre-History" ("Jômon Shô"), which Sankai Juku presented in Toronto, has seven scenes with nature images in their subtitles.

Plastic panes stand in four corners, a rainbow is projected on a blue background. Yasukuzo Sato's music — light percussion to jazz drumming — and the sound of a conch introduce the lowering of four men by their ankles from the proscenium. Lumps assuming human form with excruciating slowness, they suggest mythical gods coming to earth.

The theme is evolution and creation in process. Amagatsu moves. through a sculptural grotesque solo, mouth open, torso distend-

In the next episode, the men are fish, in sacks with fins, flailing repeatedly and propelling themselves across the stage. Amagatsu returns, a foreshortened mutant, a blur behind a pane in the section. "Sickness is incurable." Nonetheless there appears a healing power to the ritual stick dance then performed by the men, who suddenly become individualized. They perform sequences of accumulated gestures. The four men then lie in fetal position around Amagatsu and rise, magnetically exterting a force upon him. Suddenly all stand frozen, like fossils.

"Homage to Pre-History" is dreamlike, even poetic at times. annihilation as well as rebirth. Its imagery seeps in through our Death seems to come before life. epidermis. The feeling is that of watching fish, exotic and fascinating, in an aquarium.

> By contrast, Eiko and Koma use nature imagery in allegories calculated to stir an audience.

In their new "Elegy," each stands nude by a puddle, from which they have seemingly emerged and into which they sink hopelessly again. Butoh's belief in the primitive as a source of theatrical vitality is even more striking in "Grain" precisely because its characters are so primitive. A man and woman have a brutal sexual encounter, their mating rite paralleled by images of sowing and reaping of grain.

There is a delicacy about Eiko's and Koma's performance that makes the other butch groups seem coarse. With chiaroscuro lighting by the designer, Blu, they view the elemental from a refined perspective.
